A person wearing a blue plaid shirt and dark pants is kneeling on a construction site. They are using a long, silver metal guide to level a layer of sand. The person's hands are resting on the guide, and their feet are visible in black work boots. The sand is light-colored and appears to be in the process of being prepared for a concrete pour. A yellow square frame is overlaid on the image, containing the text "HELPFUL INFORMATION".

LAYING PORCELAIN

PREPARING THE JOB

- Check your tiles (from a number of different pallets where necessary) to ensure that you are happy with both the colour and quality.
- Prepare your base – dig the ground to a depth of approximately 150mm below finished patio level.
- We would recommend laying a weed suppressant membrane underneath your sub-base.
- Lay your hardcore – spread a layer approximately 100mm deep, then compact the layer thoroughly with a plate compactor.
- CHECK – you have left enough room for the thickness of the slabs.

LAYING PORCELAIN TILES

- All slabs must be laid on a full wet bed of mortar mix 30-50mm deep.
- A 4:1 mixed building sand to cement mix is recommended.
- Apply a slurry primer (mix cement, water and an SBR bonding agent to a creamy consistency) to the back of each tile before it is laid.
- Lay the tile while the back is still wet; this will aid adhesion to the mortar bed.
- Allow for 10-12mm joints when laying the tiles, use tile spacers as a guide.

- CHECK – that you are mixing your tiles from different packs to achieve a blended variation of colour.
- Porcelain can be cut using a disc cutter fitted with a diamond blade suitable for porcelain, we recommend that you feed the disc with water to cut.

FINISHING TOUCHES

- Please speak to our staff for the most suitable jointing compound for your project.
- It is vital to work cleanly when laying porcelain.
- Any residue left over from the laying process must be removed as soon as possible – failure to do so may result in staining on the surface.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

- Porcelain products are made in batches.
- These batches may have slight variations in shade, please ensure that you take this into account if purchasing on different occasions for the same projects.

LAYING NATURAL STONE

PREPARING THE JOB

- Make sure you're happy with the quality of your product before you start.
- Prepare your base – dig the ground to a depth of approximately 150mm below finished patio level.
- We would recommend laying a weed suppressant membrane underneath your sub-base.
- Lay your hardcore – spread a layer approximately 100mm deep, then compact the layer thoroughly with a plate compactor.
- CHECK – you have left enough room for the thickness of the slabs.

LAYING NATURAL STONE

- All slabs must be laid on a full wet bed of mortar mix 30-50mm deep.
- A 4:1 mixed building sand to cement mix is recommended.
- An SBR bonding agent should be used to aid adhesion to the mortar bed.
- CHECK – are you laying the product the correct way up – with the largest surface area facing upwards.
- CHECK – are you mixing slabs from different packs as you lay.
- Use a rubber mallet to gently tap down the slabs and a spirit level to ensure that the paving is level.

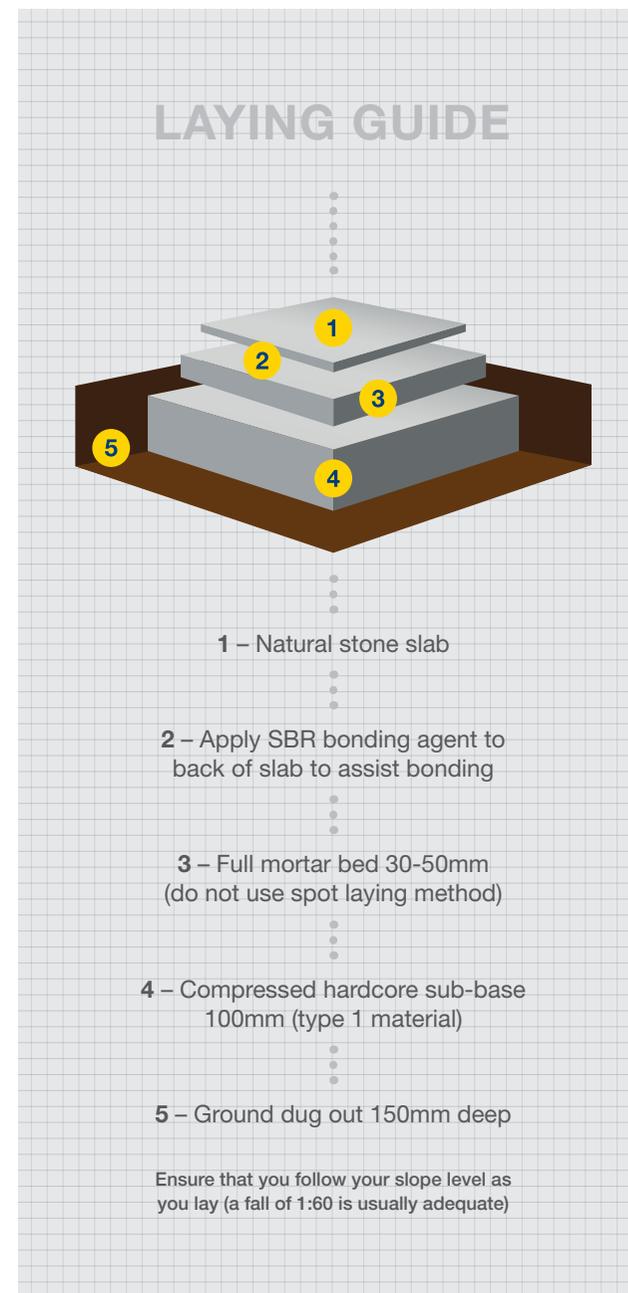

- Ensure that you consider the angle of the patio so that there is suitable run-off during wet weather.
- There must be a suitable drainage outlet present at the end of the patio's run off.
- A disc cutter with a suitable attachment is required to ensure you get the desired shape and finish

FINISHING TOUCHES

- Once the patio has been laid the joints between the patio need to be sealed.
- We would recommend a jointing compound that can be brushed in and will harden when in contact with the air.
- Ask in store for the right compound to suit your job.

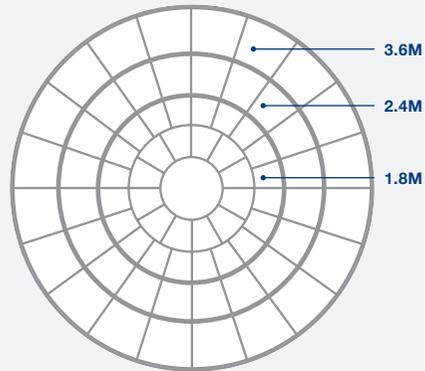

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

- Due to the composition of natural stone, colour variations may occur after installation.
- 'Delamination' may occur after laying where riven parts of stone may 'flake' off – this is perfectly normal.
